	60th PES Annual Meeting and Conference	With countries around the world emerging from the COVID-19 pandemic, many lessons have been learned in efficiently and effectively organizing work environments and the labor market, providing for basic needs of households, and strengthening public institutions, all with profound effects on the delivery of health, education, transportation, housing, energy and power, travel and the design of built environments, as well as the structuring of supply chains and the organization of financial organizations. At the same time, many challenges have emerged following the relatively long period of economic inactivity and the rise of geopolitical threats in Europe, Asia and elsewhere—the rise of oil prices and subsequent inflation, disruptions in international trade, and continued menace of autocracy. Even with the threat of the pandemic receding, issues related to the political, economic, cultural and digital divide, climate change, and autocracy continue to plague the world; these developments have especially affected developing countries, such as the Philippines.
